INTRODUCTION

The Indian gazetteers, besides being fascinating accounts for general readers, are a rich source material both primary and secondary for the academicians who study economic history of India.

Nature of Gazetteers

Generally Gazetteer means geographical dictionary. But here it has come to be a comprehensive description of a place and people including geographical, physical, historical, political, economic, social and cultural data.

In the early years of the East India Company, the natural curiosity about an alien land and people made the servants of the Company and other foreign travellers to gather information about India. As the Company began to acquire parts of India a political necessity of knowing more and more about the country was seriously felt. W.W. Hunter, an authority of Indian Gazetteers had written aptly to the Viceroy of India in 1869, "Nothing, nothing is more costly to a government than ignorance."

Thus, along with travel accounts of observant foreign travellers, exigencies of administration compelled the Company as rulers to undertake the preparation of surveys (general, military, revenue and statistical), non-official and special investigations, and general and statistical reports in different parts of the country under official or semi-official auspices. They were written or compiled by European members of the Indian Civil Service, army personnel, missionaries, and a few by Indian scholars. Every such piece of writing was not necessarily called a Gazetteer but known as Manuals in Madras till 1900 (which contained local information for incoming new British officers in the districts), and elsewhere as Memoirs, Reports, Notes and observations. The title of one of the outstanding work on Bombay city is: Materials towards a statistical account of the town and island of Bombay.

A gazetteer type of literature pre-supposes a political condition, viz., the formation of the unit of administration and the collection of statistical information necessary for the administration. Even in pre-British India such type of literature was not unknown. Kautilya's Arthashastra required the state officials to collect variety of detailed statistical information. Hiuen Tsang's diary served as a manual for different parts of India and specially his account of cities and houses would be a contribution to a gazetteer of India of that age. Some parts of the Abdul Fazal's Ain-I-Akbari containing a minute description of the geographical, physical and historical aspects of the Mughal Empire and a scientific survey of its finances, trade, industry, castes and tribes, served as an administrative manual for Akbar's administration.

History of Publication

In times of East India Company's rule, one of the first references to the concept of gazetteer type of work is to be found in a letter to the Revenue and Judicial, Military, Secret, Political and Foreign Departments, dated June 24, 1803: "In order to enable the Company's historiographer to complete a general history of the British affairs in the East Indies.... we direct that such of our servants as may be in situations to promote the public work, be instructed to transmit to you, for the purpose of being forwarded to use such information on the chronology, geography, government, laws, political revolutions, and progressive stages of the fine arts, and particularly on the former and present state of internal, and foreign trade, as they may be in stations to afford or may from time to time be able to collect." In 1807, Lord Minto appointed Dr. Francis Buchanan to commence work on a "full and accurate statistical survey of the territories under the immediate authority of the Presidency of Fort William." The information collected was not published immediately but was made available as source material for others who followed. His report on Dinajpur is recognised as the earliest district gazetteer. In 1815 Walter Hamilton published his East India Gazetteer in London, followed by Martin's History, antiquities, topography, and statistics of Eastern India. Thorton's Gazetteer in four volumes published in 1854 was claimed to be the first printed work which assumed the character of completeness as a gazetteer till the publication of the first edition of the Imperial Gazetteer of India by W.W. Hunter in 1881. Sir Richard Temple in the Central Provinces also tried to compile a number of gazetteers. A large number of District Manuals and gazetteers followed in rapid succession but these efforts of the provincial governments were uncoordinated, isolated and therefore not fully satisfactory. Some were more concerned with local matters than national problems. In 1871 the Government of India accepted Hunter's comprehensive plan for the preparation of the gazetteers under central authority. Hunter started with district as the unit and asked the respective District Collectors for facts and figures relating to revenue, distribution of land, history, geography, general conditions and so on. He himself wrote a gazetteer for Orissa as an object lesson. For this purpose he travelled extensively and noticed the conditions of the tribal people. He read the Punjab MS through with the compiler and sat for months over page by page with the compiler of Oudh gazetteer. He also put the statistical account of Bengal and Assam into a readable shape. Thus for 12 years it was a very strenuous, hard, organisational and supervision work. Being a great scholar as well as an administrator he proved himself to be the most suitable to the job on hand and is claimed as father of Indian gazetteers.

By the beginning of the present century, the Government decided to revise the Imperial gazetteer and mainly by efforts of Lord Curzon, a new revised edition was issued in 1907-1909 in 26 volumes. In addition to the 'India' volumes, a 'Provincial series' with provinces as units and 'District gazetteer series' with districts as units were also issued. The series of works published as the Imperial Gazetteer of India along with the provincial gazetteers, the district gazetteers, the manuals and gazetteers of the princely states, and supplementary statistical volumes issued from time to time, constitute a unique source material for social and economic history of India. It is said that no comparable area of the world has anything like this compilation of gazetteers on a country.

Preparation of the check-list

When it was decided to include gazetteers in the present Bibliography on Economic History of India, a preliminary check-list was prepared to have an idea about the number of items to be annotated. The works used were:

(1) History of the gazetteers of India by S.B. Chaudhuri. (New Delhi: Ministry of Education, Government of India, 1964).

(2) India gazetteers, a Check-list and Index brought out by International Documentation Centre AB, Tumba-Sweden, its Basic Collections in micro-edition, 1965. (The Centre has also published a supplementary list to the Check-list and Index).

(3) The District Gazetteers of British India, a Bibliography, by Henry Scholberg. Inter Documentation Company AG ZUG Switzerland, 1970.

Also while visiting various libraries for annotation of the items, the check-list was continuously strengthened on the basis of the collections of those libraries. Besides the Library of the Servants of India Society, and the Gokhale Institute of Politics and Economics, Poona, National Library and West Bengal Secretariat Library in Calcutta, and Central Secretariat Library and National Archives of India in New Delhi, were mainly used for annotation of gazetteers. (A list of the libraries consulted is given elsewhere).

Subjects covered

The arrangement of the items in the Bibliography is not made subject-wise but region-wise, since most of the gazetteers cover, more or less, the same subjects as: geography, geology, minerals, climate, animal resources, forests and vegetation, history, archaeology, population, migration, census statistics, religions, castes and tribes, famines, floods, agriculture, soils, crop irrigation, live-stock, credit, tenures, cottage industries, large-scale industries, internal trade, exports and imports, marketing, weights and measures, trade routes, roads, railways, shipping, ports, posts and telegraphs, labour, wages, public administration, public finance, revenue and expenditure, land revenue including rents assessment and settlement, fiscal policy, taxation, prices, local governments, police, jails, education, medical services, public health, army, etc. By taking advantage of these common subjects discussed in the gazetteers, a proforma of contents and availability of statistics for all the districts in a district series is prepared by going through each volume of that series. For this very reason there is no separate subject index to the Bibliography of Gazetteers - only a region and author index is given at the end, and a statistics on a region is indicated by a small s in the brackets.

In all, 1336 items are included in the present Bibliography, which is divided into two parts: viz., Part I - India gazetteers, and Part II - Provinces, princely states, and district gazetteers. The first part contains the annotation of Imperial gazetteer of India and its provincial series and miscellaneous gazetteers. The second part is arranged alphabetically region-wise, including provinces and princely states. Within the bigger unit of a province, gazetteers dealing with the whole of the province are arranged first; followed by various district series - arranged chronologically and these are followed by stray districts or states - arranged alphabetically.

The coverage of items is as follows:

The Bibliography begins with an appropriate item, namely, Plan for an Imperial Gazetteer of India, by W.W. Hunter. In Part I, the earliest gazetteer included is Buchanan-Hamilton's, A journey from Madras through the countries, etc; published in 1807. In Part II, the earliest gazetteer annotated is, A short gazetteer of Sattarah, Bombay, Aurangabad, Kokan, Carnatic, Burhanpur, Khandaisee, Guzarat, published in Asiatic Miscellany in Calcutta in 1787.

Following is a region-wise description of gazetteers included in Part II.

Assam

There are 32 items on Assam. Hunter's Statistical Account of Assam in two volumes, published in 1879, is an important landmark. Separate section is devoted to each district except Manipur for which only several references are made. R. Brown's Statistical Account of the native state of Manipur, published in 1873 and E.W. Dun's Gazetteer of Manipur published in 1886, however, deal Manipur fully. In his prefaces to the district gazetteers of Assam published in 1905-06, B.C. Allen made no reference to Hunter's Statistical Account of Assam, but the pattern established was maintained in the chapter arrangement of the Allen series. There is more statistics in the Allen series than in the Hunter's Statistical Account. In the prefaces of each of the Assam district gazetteers the author gives the reason for not including the geographical dictionary of the region in the gazetteer due to want of bigger villages and towns. Statistical volumes published later in 1914 and 1915, called Supplement, were all compiled by R. Friel. In 1928, Allen published a volume on Sadiya Frontier Tract and Balipara Frontier Tract.

Baluchistan

There is only one district gazetteer series for Baluchistan. The first five volumes of the series are for the districts and last three for the native states of Sarawan, Kachhi, Jhalawan, Makran, Kharan and Las Bela. All volumes contain 'miniature gazetteers' describing tehsils and other sub-divisions. Appendices give practical information on routes, dak bungalows, treaties, lists of agricultural implements, trees, etc., and also include bibliographies and glossaries. Each gazetteer is organised into four chapters, thus:

I. Descriptive,
II. Economic,
III. Administrative and
IV. Miniature gazetteers.

The name of Diwan Jamiat Rai is often mentioned, in these gazetteers, with C.F. Minchin as co-author. Two statistical series were also published, one, under the title, Statistical Tables and explanatory notes compiled by C.F. Minchin, and the other by Denys Bray, under the title, Statistical tables.

Bengal

There is no other province of British India that received so much gazetteer coverage as Bengal, for which there are no less than 246 items. It was the first province that the East India Company had under its administrative control and the districts were organised as revenue collectorates. After the pioneering work of Dr. Buchanan-Hamilton, there followed a number of quasi-official documents generally known as 'statistical and geographical reports', written by the Indian Civil Service personnel. Most of them are sketchy, brief and local in scope, but as they contained the type of information later to be identified with the full-fledged district gazetteers, they have been included in this Bibliography. The most well-known gazetteer series on Bengal is, again, W.W.Hunter's twenty volumed Statistical account, written while he was serving as the Director General of Statistics, and compiling simultaneously the Imperial Gazetteer. Each district account begins with a paragraph stating location with natural and political boundaries, geography, population, agriculture, communications, commerce, administration and medical aspects. L.S.S. O'Malley, Superintendent, Gazetteer Revision, Bengal, later on based his revision of the gazetteers on settlement reports and other works of 19th century. The first statistical volumes for Bengal titled as Statistics came out in 1905 with the help of 1901 Census figures, and were un-numbered. The statistical series which was based on 1911 Census was numbered to correspond with O'Malley's series of 'Main Volumes'. Then followed two more series of statistical volumes, the first in 1923, and the second in 1933, making the number of statistical volumes 140 in all.

There are also a number of gazetteer-type of books available on Bengal districts, the earliest being, Topographical and statistical sketch of Bankoorah by Hara Chandra Ghosh, and Dorje-ling, by H.V. Bayley, both published in 1838.

Bihar and Orissa

Except for the Hazaribagh and Ranchi districts, all other districts of Bihar and Orissa were already covered by the Bengal district gazetteer series. However, their revised editions were brought out by the Bihar and Orissa Government. As J.F. James, Compiler, in his preface to the Patna gazetteer writes: "A great part of the present edition reproduces Mr. O'Malley's work. But much re-writing and revision has been rendered necessary by changes and developments since 1907. Because of the new archaeological discoveries it was necessary to re-write the sections on Nalanda, Rajgir and Patliputra." The revised editions for the districts of Champaran by R.E. Swanzy, and Santal Parganas by S.C. Mukharji were published in Bihar district gazetteers series and are included here. A series of statistical volumes was also published in 1913-1918 as a part of the Bihar and Orissa district gazetteer series.

Bombay

In Bombay, gazetteer work started around 1810, when Alexander Walker wrote his reports on Kathiawar and Gujarat. In 1843, the Government of Bombay asked its district collectors to write full information on their districts as part of their annual reports. In 1867 the Secretary of State for India asked the Bombay Government to compile a gazetteer modelled after that of Central Provinces by Richard Temple which was then in preparation. Between 1874-1884, statistical accounts for the districts and states of Kathiawar were written by Major Watson and were done as a contribution to the Kathiawar portion of the Bombay gazetteer series under the editorship of James M. Campbell. A typical district gazetteer prepared under the editorship of Campbell contains chapters on general description, production, population, agriculture, capital, trade, history, land administration, justice, revenue and finance, education, health, places of interest, and a section on the small princely states that happen to be within that district. Campbell was assisted not only by his Indian Civil Service colleagues but also by clergymen, military officers and Indian scholars like R.G. Bhandarkar, Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji and others. The statistical volumes, called 'B' volumes, were published in three series - the first in 1903-07, the second in 1913-14, and the third in 1926-28. Edwardes' the Gazetteer of Bombay city and island published in 1909-10 in 3 volumes, although a revised edition of Campbell's Materials towards a statistical account of the town and island of Bombay (3 vols), is not a part of district gazetteer series. In all, the province is well covered by the district gazetteers, which are store-houses of authentic information, strong in history and written in scholarly style.

Central India

Captain C.E. Luard, between 1907 and 1912, compiled and edited gazetteers of Central India states. About his difficulties he writes in his preface to the first Gwalior volume, "Even in Gwalior with a more systematic method of recording statistics than obtains in most native states, the collection of the figures has been no light task. There is no European Collector in each district with a highly trained staff accustomed to statistical returns to assist in the work. The temporary Gazetteer Office becomes responsible for obtaining and combining the figures. Another source of difficulty was the entire re-organisation of all the Zillas made in 1904, after work had begun, necessitating re-arrangement. This gazetteer is the first of its kind and must not be judged against compilations for British districts with the statistics of many years behind them in former gazetteers to work on."

The Luard volumes are complete with maps, illustrations showing coats of arms, genealogical tables of ruling families, indices and glossaries.

Central Provinces

The gazetteer work in the Central Provinces was undertaken by Sir Richard Temple in 1864 when the Government resolved to collect relevant material from all officers concerned, and also from the settlement department. R.V. Russell was mainly responsible for the district series published in 1906-12. Rai Bahadur Hira Lal wrote most of the chapters on history. Except for the Chhattisgarh Feudatory States gazetteer, which is necessarily organised on a state by state basis, each of the district gazetteers adheres to a rather rigid format and outline. The chapters include general description, history and archaeology, population, agriculture, loans, prices, wages, manufactures, trade and communications, forest and minerals, famine, land revenue administration, general administration, followed by a description of the tahsils, towns, important villages, rivers and hills. Three series of statistical tables published in 1904-30 are followed by Amendments (sheets) published in 1926-49.

Cochin

Cochin state manual is compiled by C.Achyut Menon. There are more photographic illustrations compared to other district gazetteers and almost no statistics are available.

Eastern Bengal and Assam

The gazetteers of the Eastern Bengal and Assam are fashioned on the same line as the Bengal district gazetteers, and the statistical volumes relating to districts are actually published in the Bengal district gazetteer series, and, therefore, are arranged there in the Bibliography.

Hyderabad

For Hyderabad state, there are two statistical table series of which one is compiled by Mohamed Rahmatulla and the second revised edition by Mazhar Husain. In all, there are 30 statistical volumes without having any 'Main' volumes. Besides the district series, the Gazetteer for the Haidarabad assigned districts commonly called Berar, edited by A.C. Lyall (1870), and the Gazetteer of the Aurangabad district, by E.G.Lunn (1884) are also included in the Bibliography.

Jammu and Kashmir

In C.E. Bates' A Gazetteer of Kashmir and the adjacent districts, published in 1873, names of villages, towns, rivers are listed alphabetically with an appropriate and very short account. The earlier work on Ladakh is Ladak, physical, statistical and historical with notes on the surrounding countries, by Alexander Cunningham published in 1854.

Madras

The first district gazetteer of Madras is Robert Baikie's, Observations on the Neilgherries including an account of their topography, climate, soil and productions, published in 1834. It is more about climate, natural resources etc. than about people. Nelson's Madura Country, a manual (1808), and Carmichael's Manual of district of Vizagapatam (1869), were the first manuals to be published under the Government orders of 1862. The manual of Malabar district by William Logan is titled only as Malabar, while Henry Morris' work is known as, A Descriptive and historical account of the Godavery district. Manual for Tanjore district is written by Diwan Bahadur T. Venkasami Rau while most others are compiled by European collectors. The gazetteers in district gazetteer series, which were published in the early 20th century, brings the manuals upto-date with new statistics. Statistical volumes called Statistical Appendices were also published in four series upto 1933.

Mysore and Coorg

A gazetteer for Mysore and Coorg compiled by Lewis Rice was published in 3 volumes in 1876-78. A revised edition for volume 1 and volume 3 was published in 1897. The massive work on Mysore, however, is that by Hayavadana Rao published in 5 volumes, of which the first four volumes deal with general description, history, economic conditions, and administration of the Mysore state as a whole, and the fifth is devoted to the details of the 8 districts of the state separately. So far as Coorg is concerned, the Gazetteer of Coorg by Richter was published as early as in 1870. Vol 3 of Lewis Rice's Gazetteer for Mysore and Coorg (1876-78), is also devoted entirely to Coorg.

North-West Frontier Province

While Bengal districts were the first to be organised as British collectorates, the North-West Frontier Province was the last one to come under British control. The gazetteer coverage is adversely affected by this fact. The districts Bannu, Dera Ismail Khan, Hazara, Kohat and Peshawar which were the parts of Punjab until 1901 were first covered in the Punjab district gazetteers - Ibbetson series. The gazetteer information for the mountainous districts which border Afghanistan is not satisfactory, nor complete. Statistical volumes to the district gazetteer series, published later, were prepared on the basis of 1901, 1911 and 1931 census figures.

North-Western Provinces

The earliest local gazetteer of North-Western Provinces, was Donald Butter's Outlines of topography, published in Calcutta in 1839. With the publication of Statistical report of the district of Cawnpoor by Sir Robert Montgomery in 1849, by order of the Honourable Lieutenant Governor, the organized gazetteer activity made possible at least 18 volumes to be published between 1849-1887, under a variety of titles: 'gazetteers', 'statistical, descriptive and historical accounts', 'official reports', 'memoirs', etc. In the meantime, Atkinson had commenced work on his monumental series, viz., Statistical, descriptive and historical account of the North-Western Provinces of India 14 vols (1874-1886). The compiler was assisted by Conybeare, Alexander and number of other officials, and the entire work was carried out under the general direction of W.W. Hunter. The volumes in the Atkinson series deal with divisions rather than districts.

Orissa

Orissa is fully covered in Bengal as well as Bihar and Orissa gazetteers. Hunter published 2 volumes in 1872 as, Orissa or viccissitudes of an Indian province under native and British rule, which is a part of Hunter's famous book The Annals of rural Bengal. So far as district gazetteer series is concerned, only one volume, that on Koraput district by R.C.S. Bell, was published in 1945.

Punjab

The earliest gazetteer on Punjab is Steinbach's The Punjab, published in 1846. But proper gazetteer activity started only in 1883-85 and 1889-1902 when a number of district gazetteers were published in a series known as Ibbetson series. The Editor of Ibbetson series made use of earlier manuscript gazetteers, settlement reports, notes supplied by district officers, and 1881 Census returns. Chapters are devoted to general description, history, the people, production and distribution, administration, finance, towns, municipalities and cantonments. Statistical tables are to be found in the appendix to each volume. While the volumes in the Ibbetson series are unnumbered, the main volumes in the Punjab district gazetteers, called 'A series', published in 1905-47, are numbered, but then very clumsily. While some numbers have been left out without any district volumes against them, in the case of some others, the same number is repeatedly used to indicate two or more different district volumes. Similarly the statistical volumes, though numbered, do not always bear the same volume number as that for corresponding Main volume in the 'A series'. The chapter arrangement in 'A series' is as follows: Chapter 1. Descriptive - including physical aspects, history, population; Chapter 2: Economic - including agriculture, rents, wages, arts, manufactures, trade, communications, famines etc ; Chapter 3: Administration, divisions, criminal and civil justice, revenue administration, assessment - tahsil-wise, local and municipal governments, public works, jails, education, etc ; Chapter 4: Places of interest; - this indicates the vast scope of the Punjab district gazetteers and its exhaustiveness. Larger princely states have a separate gazetteer while small states are combined with the adjacent districts.

Rajputana

Rajputana comprises of about 20 princely states and a small British province of Ajmer-Merwara. When Hunter was attempting to collect material for his Statistical Survey, he had little control over the princely states. Rajaputana Gazetteer, published in 3 volumes, is comprehensive in nature: Volume 1 is a general report on the states together, and the next two volumes are devoted to each state separately. The next one, Rajputana Gazetteer, published in 1904-1909, covers 7 princely states and also Ajmer-Merwara. Special mention may be made here of the excellent cartography of this gazetteer.

Sikkim

Risley's Gazetteer of Sikhim state is the only one published on this state. It deals more about flora, fauna, minerals and natural resources than about its people. There is a special chapter on Lama institution also.

Sind

Hughes' Gazetteer of Sind followed Hunter's scheme for a Bombay Statistical survey. Hughes' book devotes the first 116 pages to a general introduction and the rest of the 946 pages to a gazetteer of places followed by tables and an index. Aitken's 519-page Gazetteer of Sind is a general description of the province.

Travancore

Manuals for Travancore state were authorised by the State government and were compiled by V. Nagam Aiya in 3 vols (1906), and, the second one by S.T.K. Vellu Pillai in 1940, in 4 vols.

United Provinces of Agra and Oudh

For the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh there is only one district series consisting of 193 volumes (Main and statistical volumes together). The Main volumes are compiled by H.R. Nevill, Drake-Brockman, Neave and Henry Walton of which H.R. Nevill was the most prolific, turning out 34 of 48 volumes. In the preparation of these volumes, both the earlier series were used, viz, Atkinson series, and the 'Statistical accounts and memoirs' series of the North Western Provinces, of which the United Provinces of Agra and Oudh was the part. Each Main volume has a gazetteer section which lists parganas and other geographical entities, and also a statistical appendix and an index. 'B', 'C' and 'D' series of 'Supplementary notes and Statistics' were compiled on the basis of 1911, 1921 and 1931 census figures.

Conclusion

The earlier Indian gazetteers were written primarily for the use of British administrators, and hence, information contained in them, may, at places, be biased due to the imperialist interests of Britain. However, these gazetteers still form a rich stock of source material on the 19th and early 20th century social and economic history of India. Fortunately, many of the old gazetteers are also now available in microfilm form on sale.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Gazetteers annotated in this Bibliography include both official and private publications. Annotations for gazetteers of India are followed by those for provincial and state gazetteers, which are arranged alphabetically. Since the subject of all gazetteers is the same, no classification number is given; instead, all items are numbered serially in a single sequence. In the classification schedule prepared for this Bibliography, appearing at the beginning of this volume, gazetteers are classified under class no. 2.1. Under each Province or State the items are grouped as follows: (1) Gazetteers covering the entire province, (2) different series, if any, (known after their authors), (3) District Series, and (4) miscellaneous works. For example, Punjab gazetteers are grouped thus: (1) Province (items 853-4), (2) Ibbetson series, 1883-1902 (item 855-903), (3) District series (items 904-1091), and (4) Miscellaneous items 1092-3). Each series is annotated in the following order:

(1) Name of the author or general editor and title of the series

(2) Total number of Main volumes, Statistical volume and books (including editions) in the series

(3) Bibliographical details of the series as a whole

(4) Explanatory information relating to publication peculiarities of the series, etc.

(5) Contents indicating general pro-forma used for the series

(6) Statistics covered by the entire series, with particulars relating to region and period covered.

(7) Volume-wise bibliographical details including the place where the volume was located, its form and condition. Letter 'B' against the volume number indicates the statistical volume.

INDEXES

Index refers to the serial numbers. Only Region and Author indexes are provided. There is no separate subject index - all the principal subjects covered by the series are shown at the beginning of each series and also mentioned in detail in the Introduction. Availability of statistics is indicated thus: (s)

EXAMPLES:

(1) Region index:
Tumkur dist, 786, 787(s)

(2) Author index:

370-397 James, J.F.W. and others. Bihar and Orissa district gazetteers. 12 Main vols 16 Statistical vols (B vols) (28 books).

Allahabad, Patna : Official, Main vols : 1917, 1924-38; Statistical vols : 1913-18.

Of the 12 Main vols noted below, 8 are revised (second) editions of the vols earlier serialized in the Bengal dist gazetteers series (numbered). As revised they appear again in the Bihar and Orissa dist gazetteers series (numbered).

Main vols for Hazaribagh and Ranchi are published for the first time in 1917 in Bihar and Orissa dist gazetteers series, but they are not numbered.

Main vols for Champaran and Santal Parganas are the revised (second) editions of the vols earlier serialized in the Bengal dist gazetteer series (numbered), but are published in their revised version in the Bihar dist gazetteers series, (un-numbered).

After the Province of Bihar and Orissa was bifurcated in 1936, two separate series for (1) Bihar, and (2) Orissa came into existence. Bihar dist gazetteers are included here along with Bihar and Orissa dist gazetteer series. Till 1947, only 2 vols, viz. Champaran and Santal Parganas are published in Bihar dist gazetteers series, having similar proforma, used for Bihar and Orissa dist gazetteers series. Orissa series, however, is not included here.

Of the 16 Statistical vols, 9 vols have their corresponding Main vols in this series, and are shown along with the Main vols. The remaining 7 vols, viz, Angul, Balasore, Bhagalpur, Gaya, Manbhum, Muzaffarpur, and Singbhum have their corresponding Main vols in the Bengal dist gazetteers series (numbered).

Statistical vols for 1901/02, published in 1905, pertaining to Bihar and Orissa dists, are available in different series as follows : 13 in the Bengal dist gazetteers series (numbered); 2 in the Bengal dist gazetteers series (un-numbered); and, one for Sambalpur, in the Central Provinces dist gazetteers series. After the publication of the Statistical vols in the years 1913 to 1918, the publication of a separate Statistical vol was discontinued. However, some revised statistics was incorporated in the revised text of the Main vol itself.

On the other hand, there are two vols each for nos 2, 3, 4, 8, 12, 13, 14 and 15; Four vols for no 7; And five vols for no 30. At the same time some dists bear more than one vol no : for Kangra, the vol nos are : 7, 10 and 30; And for Jhelum the vol nos are : 13 and 27. Two canal gazetteers viz, 1) Lower Jhelum Canal, vol 1, and 2) Triple Canals, vol 11 are also serialised in the 'A series'.

The Statistical vols published generally in three sets for each dist, though numbered, do not always bear the same vol no as that for corresponding Main vol in the 'A series'. But here, they are arranged with the corresponding Main vols noting their original vol nos after the title.

Besides, there are seven Statistical vols (for 3 dists and 1 princely state) which have no corresponding Main vols in the 'A series' and are, therefore, arranged separately at the end; Of which only Dera Gazi Khan dist has its Main vols in the Ibbetson series.

Lahore : Official, Main vols : 1905-47; Statistical vols : 1904-37.

2. District series, 1919-28

E.H. Aitken's Gazetteer of the province of Sind, was accepted as the one Main vol to be used with the seven B vols (Statistical vols) which were published in two sets in 1919/20, and 1926-28. In the beginning instructions were given to compile A and B vols for each of the seven dists, but as the work proceeded it became clear that in Sind the plan of having a separate vol for each dist would involve excessive repetition due to the homogeneity of the province and govt sanctioned a departure from that plan and the preparation of one A vol for all Sind with seven B vols.

The first section of each of the B vols lifts several descriptive paragraphs from the Aitken Gazetteer and the other sections update Aitken's statistics. The second half of each of the B vols consists of statistical tables from the 1911 and 1921 census reports. Description of places of interest is relegated to the Statistical vols.

INTRODUCTION

Laws regulating economic activities in a country form an integral part of its economic structure. A study of economic history of a country can never be complete without a study of its, what may be called, economic legislation, which includes diverse types of laws such as those relating to land tenures, formation and working of joint stock companies, regulation of hours of work, wages and working conditions of labour, currency and banking, regulation of road, water and air transport, imposition and collection of taxes on income and wealth of individuals and corporations, on production and sale of goods, on import and export of goods, etc. A comprehensive list of the types of laws that can come under the term economic legislation is not an easy one as the term is very wide and likely to change over time.

Development of Judicial Administration in India

Before the establishment of the British rule in India there were several Hindu and Muslim States of various sizes spread throughout India. There was neither a fixed system of codified laws nor of the administration of justice in any one of them. The actual law administered was more or less the customary law of the region, though certain law texts of the Hindus or the Muslims were cited to support the judgements given by the courts and the law officers. The law cited in the Manusmruti or the Shariat was formulated in the remote period and was mostly worded in very general and equivocal terms.

When the East India Company was established in 1600 under the title "The Governor and the Company of Merchants trading to the East Indies", its constitution, powers and privileges were set down by a Charter issued by Queen Elizabeth. The Charter authorised the Company to make, ordain and constitute laws, orders and the constitution for the good government of the Company and its servants and for the better advancement and continuance of its trade and traffic. The Company was authorised to execute its laws and to inflict punishment by way of imprisonment and fine, provided that the laws and punishments were reasonable and not contrary or repugnant to the laws, statutes and customs of England. Thus legislative power, limited though in scope, was conferred upon the Company at its very beginning.

This power was soon found to be inadequate and the Company had to secure from the Crown a Commission to the Commander-in-Chief of each of its voyage, empowering him to inflict punishments under the martial law. To stop this practice of granting royal commission for each voyage, a general power to issue such commissions to its captain was conferred upon the Company in 1615. There was also the problem of maintaining discipline among the staff of the Company posted at various factories located on land. To meet this problem the Company was given in 1623 the power of issuing commissions to any of its Presidents or Chief Officers in Settlements to punish offences committed on land by the Company's British Servants. These gave the Company adequate powers to enforce discipline among its servants both on board the ships and on the Indian soil.

The exercise of these powers, however, was limited to the Company's servants, whereas, the Company wanted powers that would be enforceable among all Englishmen residing within its jurisdiction. Consequently the Charter of 1661 granted to the Company extensive judicial powers, extending to cover all the persons, including Indians living in the Company's Settlements. The Charter paved the way for the Company to transform itself into a territorial power from a mere trading concern. The Charter laid down that justice was to be administered according to the English law. No provision was made to preserve the laws and customs of the local population. After the Charter of 1661, Courts of judicature were established at Calcutta, Madras and Bombay. However, the development of judiciary at these places was not uniform.

The Charter of 1726 tried to bring some uniformity in the administration of justice in different Presidency towns. For the first time civil and criminal courts which derived their authority not from the Company but from the Crown were established in the three Presidency towns. Appeals from the courts in India were to be made to the Privy Council in England. The Charter also established a local legislature in each Presidency town and thus shifted to some extent legislative activity from England to India.

The Charter of 1753 tried to carry this uniformity still further. Court of Requests, Mayors Court with civil jurisdiction, Court of the Governor-in-Council to hear appeals from the Mayor's Court, Justices of Peace and Court of Quarter Sessions consisting of the Governor and members of the Council to decide criminal cases were established in all the Presidency towns. The ultimate Court of appeal in civil cases was to be the Privy Council.

Even then the system was not without defects. There were no law codes nor law reports. There was also some confusion in applying the English criminal law to Indians who had no knowledge of English law. In 1772, the Committee of Secrecy, appointed by the House of Commons to look into the affairs of the East India Company, criticised the judicial system at Calcutta in one of its reports. Because of this, there was a change in the judicial administration and consequently, the Supreme Court was established at Calcutta in 1774, under the Regulating Act of 1773 (13 Geo III C 63).

However, due to the territorial acquisitions of the Company, the problem of judicial administration no longer remained confined only to the Presidency towns. In 1765 the Company acquired the grant of Diwani of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, from the Mogul Emperor. Under the grant the Company assumed responsibilities for military, revenue and civil justice. The Directors of the Company authorised the Governor of Calcutta to "adopt such regulations and pursue such measures as shall at once ensure to us every possible advantage and free the ryots from the oppression of zamindars and petty tenants". Warren Hastings prepared a detailed plan of judicial administration, one of the striking features of which was to permit the Hindus and the Muslims the use of their own laws and customs in several areas of civil matters.

The Regulating Act of 1773, called "An act for establishing certain regulations for the better management of the affairs of the East India Company as well in India as in Europe", made certain changes in the structure of the Government of India. Under it the whole civil and military government was vested in the Governor-General and his Council. Independent status of each Presidency was abolished and a general control of the Governor-General was established over them. The Governor-General and Council were authorised to make rules, regulations and ordinances for the good government of the Settlement of Fort William and factories subordinate to it, subject to the restrictions that they were not repugnant to the laws of England, that they were reasonable, and, that they were not to be effective until registered and 'published' in the Supreme Court.

After the passing of the Regulating act, two distinct and independent judicial systems came into existence in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa, one being the Company's system in the mofussil deriving its authority from the grant of Diwani, and the other being the institution of the Supreme Court at Calcutta deriving its authority from the Crown. The Courts in the mofussil followed the local customary law while the Supreme Court followed the English common law. This dual system created confusion and difficulties.

In 1780, the House of Commons appointed a Select Committee, known as the Touchet Committee, to inquire into the administration of justice in Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. The report submitted led to the passage of the Settlement Act of 1781, (21 of Geo III C 70). The act gave judicial immunity to the Government for anything done in public capacity. It was laid down that the Supreme Court would have full power to hear and determine all actions and suits against the inhabitants of Calcutta. All matters relating to inheritance and succession to land and goods and contract and dealing between parties were to be determined by respective laws and usages of Hindus and Muslims. In case only one of the parties was a Muslim or a Hindu, the law of the defendant was to be applied. Thus the Court was to apply personal laws and usages of Hindus and Muslims as the situation demanded.

In the Presidency towns of Bombay and Madras the judicial system established by the Charter of 1753 continued till 1798 when Recorders' Courts were established there (37 Geo III C 142) which later on were replaced by the Supreme Courts. An act of 1823 gave these Supreme Courts powers equivalent to those of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, (4 Geo IV C 71).

The administration of justice in the mofussil also underwent changes. Diwani Adalats established in 1780 were empowered to decide all civil cases. Efforts were made from time to time to improve the working of these Adalats. In 1790 Lord Cornwallis tried to reform the administration of criminal justice. Accordingly, magistrates were appointed at different places. Above them were the Courts of Circuit and the final court was the Sadar Nizamat Adalat.

With the reforms of the administration of justice, the problem of preparing codes of regulations was also taken up by Lord Cornwallis. Since 1772, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa were governed through regulations made by the Government at Calcutta. However, there was no general code of regulations. A regulation made during the Governor-Generalship of Lord Cornwallis laid down definite form in which regulations had to be made in future (Regulation 41 of 1793). Cornwallis also abolished court fees, which were, however, reimposed in 1795 (Regulation 38 of 1795).

In 1861 High Courts were established in the Presidency towns. Later on they came to be established in different provinces also. These became the highest courts of appeal in the Province in both the civil and criminal matters. After 1861 there were little changes in their judicial administration.

In 1937 the Federal Court of India was established at first with a limited jurisdiction to decide cases between the Centre and the Provinces and appeals in cases certified by the High Courts, as involving a substantial question of law relating to the interpretation of the Constitution.

After independence in 1947, the Federal Court was replaced by the Supreme Court which is today the Highest Court of appeal in the country. The right to appeal to the Privy Council came to an end after 1947.

Above is a broad outline of the development of judicial administration in the country. This was accompanied by a similar development in the field of codification of laws.

Codification of Laws

It has already been mentioned that before the advent of the British rule in India, customs and usages of the people were the main basis of legal verdicts. The law texts were more or less antiquated and vague. Outside the Presidency towns, the British followed the customary law. Later on in the Presidency towns also customary law of the Hindus and the Muslims was followed.

In the early British period there was no uniformity even in the statute law. Each Presidency had its own regulations. There was no clear and compact codified law for the country as a whole.

From 1600 to 1726 A.D. the East India Company could exercise legislative power through its General Court in England. The Charter of 1726 authorised the Governor in Council to make regulations rules and ordinances subject to the confirmation of the Court of Directors. The Regulating Act of 1773 (13 Geo III C 63) gave legislative powers to the Governor-General-in-Council.

In 1793 a regulation laid down the forms in which regulations had to be framed in future (Regulation 41 of 1793). This regulation started the era of regulation law.

The Charter of 1833 made provision for the establishment of an all-India legislature, having authority to legislate for all the places coming under the government of the East India Company. The laws made by the Governor General of India in Council were called the "Acts of the Government of India." They were to have the same force as the acts of the British Parliament.

The Charter also made a provision for the appointment of a Law Commission. Accordingly, the First Law Commission was appointed in 1835, under the chairmanship of Mecaulay, the Law Member in the Governor General's Council. The Commission, which was wound up in 1843, codified the penal law, considered the law applicable to non-Hindus and non-Muslims, and prepared drafts of the civil procedure code and the law of limitation.

The Charter of 1853 also made a provision for the appointment of a Law Commission which, unlike the first Law Commission, was to sit in England and not in India. This Commission which functioned till 1856 and submitted four reports, recommended the English law to be used as the basis for codification of different laws in force in India. It also opined against the codification of the personal laws of Hindus and Muslims.

In 1858, the East India Company was dissolved and the Crown took over completely the government of India. This paved the way for further codification of Indian laws. The Code of Civil Procedure was enacted in 1859 (8 of 1859) followed by the Limitation Act (14 of 1859). Indian Penal Code became a statute in 1860 (45 of 1860), followed by the Code of Criminal Procedure in 1861 (25 of 1861).

The Third Law Commission which was appointed in 1861, submitted seven reports and prepared drafts for laws relating to succession, contracts, negotiable instruments, transfer of property, etc. Later on these were passed by the legislature and converted into acts.

Thus, by 1875, a number of substantive and procedural acts came on the statute book of India.

The Fourth Law Commission was appointed in 1879 to scrutinise the drafts of certain bills and to suggest further codification. After their revision a number of acts relating to trusts, transfer of property, easements, etc., were codified. Thus, by 1900, a considerable number of additional, substantive and procedural laws were codified.

Codification of laws continued and compact acts on several subjects were passed, both at the Centre and, in the provinces. Codification of laws has brought uniformity and precision in legislation, which did not exist in the pre-Britain rule nor even in the early British rule.

Scope of Work

Only regulations and acts are annotated in the Bibliography. Generally the laws made before 1834 were called regulations. However, even after 1834 regulations have been made under special legislative powers conferred upon the Governors. Limitations of time and space compelled us to be very selective in annotating laws. Amending acts, except those which were made to amend and consolidate the acts which were repealed by them, are excluded. Similarly, rules, notifications and orders issued under the acts have also been excluded. A scholar who wants to study the impact of any set of laws on the economy will have to study not only bare texts of acts but also amendments, rules, notifications, bye-laws and orders issued thereunder. As only acts are annotated, there is exclusion in the present Bibliography, of all commentaries on these acts. Many of these commentaries contain case laws that developed under the acts. Debates which took place in the legislature at the time of the passing of the acts are also a very useful source of information on the purpose, scope and the limitations of the act. These are not included in our annotation. The Bibliography is limited only to the important acts directly related to different aspects of the Indian economy.

Availability of Material

For annotating acts passed by the British Parliament use was made of the collections of acts relating to the East India Company and India, and annual collections of acts published by the Indian Governments under different titles.

For annotating the regulations made before 1833, collections of such regulations published at different times were mainly relied upon. However, these publications included the texts of regulations that were in force when the collection was published. For a number of regulations the texts were not available and one had to be content with the recording of the number and the title only of the concerned regulation. For annotation of the Government of India acts from 1834, the Indian Law Codes published at different times were mostly used. These Codes contain acts which were in force when the codes were published. Different editions of the Codes were published after an interval of long periods. The acts made and also repealed during the interval find no place in the codes published after that interval. However, the gaps were filled by consulting annual collections of acts passed during a year. Some Central acts were annotated from the volumes of the Bombay Gazette which contained Government of India acts also.

The task became a little difficult when the work of annotation of acts made by different provinces was undertaken. Annual collections of acts passed were not published by all the provinces and even when they were published, they were not published every year. It was not possible therefore, to locate all such collections for all the provinces. Even in the case of codes, all the editions were not always available. As stated earli earlier, Codes contain only the acts which are in force. The situation, therefore becomes difficult when any of the published edition of a provincial Code is not available.

In the case of ex-princely states, it was found that there were neither the law codes nor the annual collection of acts for the majority of them. In the case of some states the English translation of acts were consulted. For some there was no material available, while for others only one or two collections published by private individuals were available. There are, thus, possibly some gaps in our annotation, particularly in the case of a few provinces and ex-princely states.

A list of source material for acts is given at the end of this Part. The list does not claim to be exhaustive. The main idea in giving this list is to inform the scholars of the probable sources where he can find texts of acts. At the end of each annotated act mention has been made of the work consulted when the act was annotated. This, however, does not mean that the act can be located only in that work.

Regions covered

We have tried to cover all the regions in India including ex-princely states. In the annotated acts the highest number of acts have been enacted by the Government of India. It is followed by the Bengal Presidency which was the first presidency to come into existance. Next came Bombay and Madras. About two-thirds of the annotated acts have been enacted by the Government of India and of the different presidencies and provinces. About one-tenth of the annotated acts have been enacted by the British Parliament. About one-forth of the acts included in the Bibliography are enacted by the ex-princely states. For Cochin, Jammu and Kashmir, Mysore and Travancore most of the relevant Codes and also annual collections of the acts were available. About 90 per cent of the acts enacted by ex-princely states and available in the form of codes and annual collections of acts are enacted by the above-mentioned four states.

For some states it was not possible to locate their codes and annual collections either because these were possibly not published at all, or because although published, the material was not available in the libraries consulted. Most of of the material relating to ex-princely states is printed in the form of gazettes. It is available in many cases only in the regional languages, and most of the enactments have been only an adaptation of the relevant Central acts, or acts of the adjoining provincial government.

Period covered

The earliest act annotated here was enacted by the British Parliament in 1661 (13 and 14 Charles II C 24). It excludes persons investing in the East India Company from the operation of bankruptcy laws. Most of the annotated acts enacted before 1750 are passed by the British Parliament. Most of the regulations covered were made after 1793. For some of these only titles were available. The text of the regulations was not always printed in the collections consulted as they were not in force when the collections were published. Acts passed upto 1947 have been annotated with the exceptions of two acts, one being the act passed by the Government of India in 1948 about the Census of population (37 of 1948), and the other being an act passed by the British Parliament in 1948 relating to the payment of pensions to judges who served in India before 15th August, 1947. This is, incidently, the last act passed by the British Parliament dealing with Indian affairs (12 and 13 George IV C 4).

Subjects covered

Acts annotated include a variety of subjects. A number of acts passed by the British Parliament relate to the administration of the East India Company and after 1858 to the constitution of the Government of India. Acts passed by the Government of India mainly relate to currency and banking, foreign trade, testamentary and intestate succession and taxation. Majority of regulations made before 1834 relate to different types of land tenure and the assessment and collection of land revenue. Acts passed by the provinces mainly include those relating to agriculture, taxation and road and inland water transport.

A subject-wise discussion of the annotated acts is given below.

Acts annotated in the Bibliography do not cover all the classification schedule. No acts have been classified under class numbers 1 (Economic Thought), 2 (General Economic History), 14 (Economic Fluctuations), 17 (National Income) and 20 (Economic Policy, Change). This may appear rather strange particularly in respect of class 20 (Economic Policy, Change), as acts are one of the main instruments of effecting economic policy by the government. The omission is due to the fact that acts have not been made directly on the subject of economic policy. Acts relating to taxes, regulation of import and export etc., which influence, or, are influenced by economic policy, are included in their respective classes to which they directly belong.

The following table gives the class-wise distribution of annotated acts.

Class-wise distribution of acts

Class No.	C l a s s	No. of acts
3	Natural Resources	92
4	Population	30
5	Social Institutions	315
6	Land	340
7	Agriculture	160
8	Co-operation	16
9	Communications	203
10	Commerce	114
11	Industry	134
12	Labour	168
13	Money and Banking	134
15	Public Finance	539
16	Foreign Trade	274
18	Consumption	44
19	Welfare Programmes	88
	Total	2651

Natural Resources

Acts classified under class 3 (Natural Resources) mainly include those relating to forests, fisheries, land utilization and famine. One of the acts deals with earthquake relief (Bihar and Orissa act 1 of 1934). This is the only act related to earthquake relief. The earliest act included in this class is about rules for the preparation of estimates and accounts of repairs to embankments, (Bengal regulation 6 of 1860). There are 14 acts on land acquisition passed by different provinces and ex-princely states.

Population

There are a few acts classified under class 4 (Population). These deal mainly with the registration of births and deaths and the decennial censecensus of population. The earliest act on the registration of births and deaths was enacted in 1863 by the Government of Bombay (Bombay 11 of 1863), while the last annotated act on the subject was enacted by the Government of India in 1948 (37 of 1948).

Social Institutions

As control of social institutions is one of the objects of law, it is not surprising that a little more than one-eighth of the acts annotated should come under class 5 (Social Institutions). In this class the highest number of items come under sub-class, 5.53 (Local Governments). These include acts about village panchayats, district local boards, municipalities and municipal corporations. Next come the acts about inheritance and succession. This was a field where in the pre-British rule there was only the customary law, which was vague and at times contradictory. When the East India Company received the Diwani rights, the administration of civil justice came under its management. The British administrators had to clarify and at times modify the customary laws of inheritance and succession of Hindus, Muslims and others. The earliest act under this class was enacted in 1793 and it related mainly to the inheritance of landed property (Bengal regulation 11 of 1793).

Land

It is also natural that a large number of acts annotated should relate to land. Collection of land revenue was the first administrative task undertaken by the East India Company. It was necessary to lay down rules for the collection of land revenue. This necessitated the defining of land tenure rights of landlords and tenants etc. This led to the passage of several acts and regulations dealing with land revenue, land tenures, etc. This section will be very useful to the scholars studying permanent settlement and its various forms.

Agriculture

As land tenures, revenue collections, and other matters connected with land formed the most important part of legislation relating to agriculture, the number of acts connected with other aspects of agriculture is not large. About 160 acts have been classified under class 7 (Agriculture). These mainly include acts relating to rural indebtedness, irrigation and agricultural pests and plant diseases.

The problem of rural indebtedness received the attention of the Government after the Deccan Riots in 1875. The first act relating to rural indebtedness was passed in 1879 (India 17 of 1879). This was amended from time to time. Some of these amendments were very important and have been included in our annotations, though amending acts have not been generally included in the Bibliography. The great depression of the thirties of the present century increased rural indebtedness and the provincial governments had to enact laws relating to the relief to indebted agriculturists. A number of such acts, therefore, were enacted after 1933.

Co-operation

The fact that co-operative movement was not much developed before 1947 is reflected in the small number of acts passed on the subject. Only 16 acts are classified under class 8 (Co-operation).

Communications

India witnesses a development in transport and communications after the advent of British rule. About 203 acts have been classified under class 9 (Communication). Of these many relate to ports, roads, railways and ferry services.

Commerce

114 acts have been classified under class 10

(Commerce). Nearly half of these relate to the regulation of trade of various commodities at different times.

Industry

Acts classified under this category include those relating to different industries like aeroplane manufacture, cotton ginning and pressing, drugs etc. Acts relating to the incorporation and working of the joint stock companies are also included in this class.

Labour

Most of the acts relating to labour deal with hours of work, working conditions, restrictions of the employment of children, payment of pensions, etc. It may be noted that before 1911 acts regulating hours of work, etc. were restricted only to women and children. It was only in 1911 that provisions for health, safety, hours of work, and holidays were made applicable to all the workers irrespective of age and sex.

Money and Banking

Acts on this subject include those relating to the standard weights and fineness of coins issued by the mints, exchange ratios of different types of rupees circulating in India in the late 18th Century, etc. About 30 acts relate to money lending. One of the acts on moneylending was enacted in 1820 (Bengal 7 of 1820). This act prohibited the ancient practice of sitting in 'dharnā' by the creditor, or his agent, at the debtor's place without taking food, to recover the loan. English laws restricting the rate of interest on loans were also applied by the courts in India. These were repealed in England in 1854, and were also repealed in India in 1855. This can be cited as an example to show how laws in India followed faithfully those in England. This repeal of usury laws was to some extent responsible for the increase in rural indebtedness in India. It was only after the Deccan Riots of 1875 that some restrictions were imposed on usury in India. As mentioned earlier, the great depression resulted in the burden of indebtedness on the people. So we find some legislation regulating moneylending being enacted after 1933.

Public Finance

The largest number of acts have been classified under class 15 (Public Finance). About one-third of these relate to customs or import and export duties. The East India Company levied customs duties on goods brought into Calcutta. Such duties covered various goods. Rates of these duties were also changed from time to time. Excise duties were levied on liquors and intoxicating drugs. We thus find several acts dealing with customs duties including town duties and excise duties on liquors and other articles. Acts relating to rates of land revenue, levy of different taxes, public loans are also to be found in considerable number in this class. About 18 acts included under this class relate to loans raised by the East India Company or the Secretary of State for India in England.

Foreign Trade

Foreign trade and exchange have always been an important subject of legislation. We, therefore, find a considerable number of acts classified under class 16 (Foreign Trade). About one-third of these deal with the regulation of import and export of various commodities. Acts passed by the British Parliament relating to East India Company's trade are also included in this class. Acts relating to the administration of the East India Company are included in class 5 (Social Institutions).

Acts relating to the constitution and powers of the East India Company, its administration of the territories in India, and its trade to India from a large part of annotated acts in the Bibliography. It is, therefore, necessary to give a brief outline of the formation and continuation of the East India Company. The first Charter for forming an East India Company was granted on 31st December, 1600. The Company was granted second Charter on 31st May, 1690, the third on 3rd April, 1661, the fourth on 5th October, 1677, the fifth on 9th August, 1683, the sixth on 12th April, 1686, the seventh on 7th October 1693, the eighth on 13th April, 1698. This was the last charter conferred upon the Company as the London East India Company. In addition to these, the Company obtained a grant of the Island of Bombay on 27th March, 1689.

King William the Third incorporated a second East India Company by a Charter on 5th September, 1698. In 1702 the two Companies were united into one new Corporation, under the title of The United Company of Merchants of England Trading to the East Indies. The last Charter granted to the old Company was conveyed to the United Corporation. There were several renewals of the Company's Charter. One of the important acts relating to the East India Company's Charter was passed in 1793 (33 George III 52). This act while continuing the possession of territories in India and the privileges of exclusive trade, made certain provisions for the administration of justice and other administrative matters.

The period of twenty years granted for the continuation of possession of territories and of the exclusive privileges of trade expired in 1813. During this period there was some criticism of the Company's monopoly of the East India trade. The Company was also in financial trouble and had to raise loans. The Company, however, succeeded in getting its Charter renewed in 1813 (53 George III C 155). Further renewals of the Charter came in 1833 (3 and 4 William IV C 85), and 1853 (16 and 17 Victoria C 95). The Charter granted in 1853 did not last long. The Crown took over the administration of the government of India in 1858 (21 and 22 Victoria C 106). It took some years to wind up the affairs of the Company in England. However, 1858 marks the end of the Company's rule in India.

The British Parliament passed several acts restricting import of tea, silk, etc. from India into Great Britain. These have also been included in class 16.

Acts passed after the taking over of the government of India by the Crown in 1858 relating to the administration of India upto the Indian Independence Act (10 and 11 George VI C 1947) are also included in this class.

Consumption

Very few acts have been classified under class 18 (Consumption). They mainly include rent control acts. One of the acts in this class is the Transfer of property act (4 of 1882), which is one of the major steps in the codification of laws in Imdia on this subject.

Welfare Programmes

Only 88 acts have been included in class 19 (Welfare Programmes). These mainly include acts relating to public health, education and town and city development programmes.

Conclusion

The above description of the annotated acts shows the wide coverage of economic legislation in India. Economic historians working on different aspects of Indian economy will be able to locate acts pertaining to their field of study with the help of this annotated Bibliography. Scholars who want to study land tenures will find very useful the acts which introduced and later on modified different land tenures in different parts of the country. A study of indebtedness particularly the rural indebtedness cannot be done without studying the laws which laid down the process of the recovery of loans, liability of the debtor and regulation of interest. It is interesting to note that during the early British rule there was a liberalisation of the restrictions on moneylending that existed under the earlier Hindu and Muslim customary laws. This was done due to the influence of Benthamite approach which condemned restrictions on private contracts. This policy, however, had to be reversed in 1879 and several laws beginning with the Deccan agriculturists' relief act of 1879 were passed to limit the liability of debtors. Legislations on this subject is a rich field for researchers. Similarly those who want to study labour conditions will find laws relating to hours of work, holidays and working conditions very useful. A study of labour laws annotated will show the cautious approach of the government in this field.

In short, this collection of annotated acts will help the researchers to locate legislation relative to their field. The collection may help both the students of economic and legal history of India in their work.

EXPLANATORY NOTE

Acts and regulations annotated in this Bibliography include those passed by the British Parliament, the Government of India, governments of presidencies and provinces, and of princely states.

Each act or regulation is annotated in the Bibliography in the following order:

(1) Name of the enacting authority - short title of the act - act no. and the year (In the case of British acts, the year of reign of the reigning monarch, the name of the monarch, and the act no. is given. In addition, the calender year is also indicated) - full title, or, object of the act.

(2) Latest year of modification of the annotated act - which earlier act/s it repeals - whether it is repealed by some other act. (It may be noted that the information relating to the last item is not taken from the act annotated but from the note in the code or from some subsequent act).

(3) Location - form - condition of the source.

(4) Jurisdiction of the act - commencing period (generally the year of passing of the act) - main subjects for which provisions are made in the act.

(5) Source: The title of the code, collection of acts, or book from which the text of the act was used for annotation. (Details about this publication may be found in the list of source material given in the Appendix to this Part).
